Why the Regordosa-Turull collection? (1898-1918)
It is one of the most fascinating private brown cylinders collection in Spain, together with those preserved in Euskadi (Ibarra collection) Aragón (Marro collection) and Andalousia (Jerez collection).
Available in Biblioteca de Catalunya Catalogue.
Why other rarities? (1898?1899?1900?1901?...)
Catalan national anthem had a very rich etnographic evolution. There is one cylinder in the collection that could be considered the first recording of one quite controverted version made by the Orfeó Català (Palau de la Música Choir).
Available discography. Only one cylinder known.
Why flamenco?
Most of historical music recordings in Spain included a variety of regional popular music (Sardanas in Catalonia, Jotas in Aragon, Zarzuela in Madrid, and flamenco everywhere, but mainly in Andalousia and Madrid).
Why Albéniz? (1903-1907)
Isaac Albéniz (1865-1909), Catalan pianist and composer, never recorded himself for commercial purposes. But he did it in 3 unique cylinders with improvisations, ca. 1903-1907.
Available discographies. No cylinders, exception made of the only 3 surviving.
1. The Regordosa-Turull Collection

- Formed by Ruperto Regordosa Planas (18??-1918), a rich Catalan business man from Tiana (Barcelona).

- Acquired by the Biblioteca de Catalunya in 2000 from the violinist and composer Xavier Turull (1922-2000).

- 358 brown wax cylinders, most of them of no brand.

- In a wood case with 187 holes (upper part) and 180 holes (lower part).

- 4 phonographs (pictured, the Edison Suitcase “A”, Serial number S4880).

- Some documentation (original list, photographs, correspondence, one cylinders catalogue).
The Collection
Regordosa's Family

- Mariano and his siblings were part of the industrial upper class in Barcelona.
- His son Ruperto Regordosa Planas (+1918) continued his father's business in fabrics and dye production.
- Ruperto was also very interested in photography and opera and flamenco music.
- Not being a politician himself, he and his brother attendend federal republican and liberal Catalanist Congress in 1880.
Regordosa's Family

We didn't find any portrait of Ruperto Regordosa. His family only kept a picture of him, which needs some restoration and it's not available.

Regordosa's country-side home in Tiana, a small village 15 km away from Barcelona. Catalan flag coat in the façade of Regordosa's home, a sign of Regordosa's national feelings.

Tiana used to be frequented by wealthy people. There was a health resort at the end of the XIXth Century in the village. It was also well known because of the carthusian Cartoixa the Montalegre, an impressive building.
Violinist and composer, Xavier Turull was also director of the city of Barcelona Conservatoire. He toured all over the world, premiered many violin works by Catalan composers and acquired Regordosa's collection at the end of the sixties.

2. Rarities within the collection

Els segadors

- Originally a traditional song, it became the Catalan National Anthem in 1993.
- Cylinder performed by the Orfeó Català, conducted by Lluís Millet.
- Undated. Probably recorded in 1901 in Tiana.
- Traditional (unadapted) text. The song ends with hurrays to Catalonia.

According to Rafael Chaves, one of the expert discographers of flamenco music, Paco el de Montilla, was one of the first cantaores to record on cylinders in Spain.

There are 6 cylinders by Paco el de Montilla in the Regordosa-Turull Collection.

In some of them, it can be clearly heard the title of the song, the name of the cantaor, and the words “grabado por el señor Regordosa en la Fonda de Oriente, Córdoba”.

Copies of some of these cylinders can be also found in private hands (Manuel Cerrejón).

Chaves, in a private correspondence with the Biblioteca de Catalunya, admitted to have dated those cylinders around 1898 or 1899, for the place where they were recorded, the Fonda Oriente in Córdoba (Andalusia) was closed down in 1900.

Albéniz cylinders.

- Isaac Albéniz (1965-1909), Pianist and composer. Author of the piano work Iberia.
- Never recorded commercially.
- Albéniz has a comprehensive discography by W.A. Clark, in which he states the existence of 3 cylinders on which Albéniz recorded three improvisations.
- Those cylinders were recorded by Ruperto Regordosa in Tiana, between 1903 and 1907.
- Datation is uncertain, but Albéniz was living in Nize at that time and only came to Barcelona and Tiana, where his wife Rosina's family had a residence.
Joaquim Malats, one of the closest friends of Albéniz, ans a pianist himself, was one of the finest Albéniz works performer.

He also was recorded by Regordosa. Three cylinders came from the Manuel Valls collection. It is probably that an interchange of cylinders between Valls and Turull could happen, as both were close friends.

After “La Vanguardia” newspaper, Albéniz and Malats played together in Tiana during the summer festivities of this village, in September 1906.
Xavier Turull had good friends in New York. Alicia de Larrocha (1926-2005), the great pianist, was one of them.

Alicia de Larrocha put Turull in contact with the International Piano Archives, and the transfers of two of the three cylinders were made. The third was broken and needed restoration. An LP entitled The Catalan Piano Tradition was published. Together with two of the three cylinders, the LP also included the playing of Granados, his pupil Frank Marshall and Alicia de Larrocha's first recordings.

In 1995, VAI reissued the LP to a CD that this time included the third cylinder, now restored.

The Biblioteca de Catalunya made a new transfer of the whole Regordosa collection in 2008. This time, it was made in Seville by Fonotrón.
Albéniz cylinders. The files

One of the transfers made by IPA were shown in the Miguel de Cervantes Digital Library. But, once the new transfers were made, some recording companies were interested in reissuing the cylinders, putting some editing in the transfers.
